There's a new woman in the business of drones and her name is Shaina Ortiz. This energetic entrepreneur has created not one, but two drone companies to provide services to drone pilots and amateurs with their equipment and provide tech support.

First, let's talk about DeviceSavers, which is a full-service electronics and drone repair company. This Tampa-based company offers drone repairs with a focus on quality, and even provides same-day service for urgent problems.

Some are surprised to discover there's a woman behind this company, and that's one of the reasons Shaina's gotten into the drone business.

"People don't typically think women are electronically-oriented or interested in the expanding aerospace industry with the launch of drones," said Ortiz. "I'm here to prove everyone's stereotypes as false, and to do so with two successful business ventures behind me. After recently launching my Legion Drones entity, I am incredibly excited to announce it will be moving into a larger and more productive space this March to accommodate for our growing clientele."

Shaina's second business is Legion Drones which is a hub for drone products and accessories, information exchange, and drone 107 pilot training. They'll soon be offering seminars and one-on-one education as well.

We hope to chat with Shaina soon about her foray into the drone business world – check back to hear more about this female entrepreneur!
